WHY CASCADED?

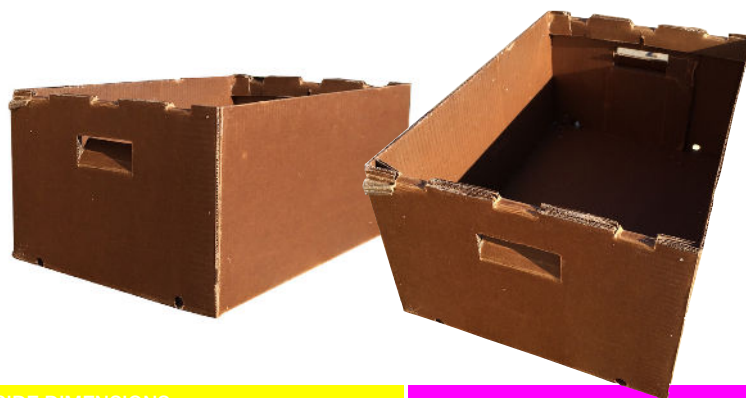

The Cascaded Wax Treatment, also known as Saturated Wax Treatment is applied to a box or blank passing vertically through multiple cascades of paraffin-based wax. It has the objective of saturating the combined board. This is the most water resistant wax treatment. It's also extra heavy duty and highly recommended for shipping seafood, produce, or any perishable product. Wax-cascaded corrugated cardboard is extremely water resistant and offers maximum stacking strength. In a moisture-environment, cascaded boxes are the ultimate choice for strength and durability.

10" CASCADED ROCK BODY™ #1200-1003-C

The 10" Cascaded Rock Body is a bigger version of the 6" Cascaded Rock Body. It's also perfect for the meat, poultry, and seafood industries in highly wet and harsh packing conditions. This body is ideal for long distance shipping.

Wax coatings for corrugated packaging provide an excellent vehicle to withstand the rigors of getting perishable foods to the market. Wax coating enables corrugated containers to handle hydro-cooling, top-icing, slush ice injection, high-humidity storage and long distance shipping.

SCHC has exclusive Wax treatments to offer you cost effective, water resistant packaging. Before becoming acquainted with them, it's useful to know the three most common methods of wax application:

1. Wax Impregnation: It imparts a dry wax coating to containerboard during corrugated operations.
2. Curtain Coating: It's applied to flat blanks by passing the sheet horizontally through a thin continuous curtain of polymer-modified wax, which forms a film over the entire surface of the walls of the board.
3. Cascading: It's applied to a box or blank passing vertically through multiple cascades of paraffin-based wax with the objective of saturating the combined board. This is the most water resistant.

SCHC uses these three techniques, sometimes overlapped, plus various paperweights and unusual box shapes, to ensure you have as much protection, leakage-proof, long distance resistance, stacking strength and large load capacity as each one of your products requires.
